FROM THE EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

AMBER SHAVERDI
HUSTON, CAE
amberh@naca.org

AS I CELEBRATE MY FIRST-YEAR ANNIVERSARY WITH NACA, while some of the priorities and projects I had in mind upon becoming your executive director have changed, the original vision I had crafted in my first few months continues to be at the core of our work. Within my first few months, I recognized we could work more closely with associate members, reach more diverse schools, reinforce the strong working relationship between volunteers and staff, enhance research and assessment within the Association, and commit all learning outcomes to our competencies. All while improving internal operations and association practices to ensure that we provide a strong membership experience to all members.

While we have had to make significant changes, at the core, the modifications are designed with long-term success in mind. Some things are temporary, such as not holding in-person conferences during this fall 2020, and we are using this time to evaluate and grow. NACA volunteers and staff have made alterations when developing curriculum so that educational offerings are designed to start with NACA competencies. This continuously places competencies at the forefront of volunteer and staff discussions. Additionally, when choosing an online platform to host NACA Virtual, we strategically identified a company that could meet other needs. Our aim is not for a quick fix for the current situation, but continuously asking ourselves what transformation we can make that will position NACA for long-term success.

I've lost track of the number of people who have said, "My NACA membership has been the most beneficial resource these past few months, more so than any other association. NACA has offered tactical resources that I need in my every day work." I am proud of our collective team efforts. NACA has added new features to NACA 24/7 and ENCORE to make finding virtual program options and crisis planning resources easily. We've also developed new resources to aid you in the changes you are having to formulate for your institution/agency. I am even more excited about upcoming initiatives that will be announced soon.

As we start a new academic year – that is bound to have lots of uncertainty - I encourage you to think about your core and your work's core. What can drive you to turn challenges into opportunities? What can push you to accomplish things you didn't think were possible at the beginning of this year? The Association is here and ready to support you. I wish you a healthy and safe start to this new academic year.

3. Financial Challenges
"How do I decide what to keep and what to cut? What if we have just enough to breathe?"
 It is critical to organize your budget from a fiscal year point of view rather than by event, or by month. Many rely on income through sales, donations, fundraising, or fees a risky move. It should not be expected the 2020-21 fiscal year will match previous years. In reality, the pandemic will have long-lasting impacts on finances. Financial decisions should take consideration of all team members involved.

Recommendations for Financial Challenges
 1. Money gain and loss impacts all involved individuals. Be transparent on the exact financial impact and how those could/will impact operations, resources, and plans.
 2. As a team, look at all recurring expenses and develop a priority system. What do you not want to risk losing? Are there unnecessary expenses with cheaper/free alternatives? All team members may not agree with the outcome - but all team members should feel heard.

Resources to Create
 • Fiscal Year Budgeting Templates
 • Updated Student Government Funding Guidelines (Student Organizations)
 • Best Practices Guide for Fundraising, Money Management, and Fund Balances

Recommendations for Student Leaders/Employee Training
 1. Assess the strengths, areas of improvement, and learning styles of each individual. This will aid you in decision making for the best protocol to maximize team and individual training experiences.
 2. Based on the job descriptions and expectations from previous years and ask yourself "to this still the expectation? Is that the skill level I need to have?"
 3. Ask your supervisor/colleagues how they are approaching the training of their students. Compare and contrast what it looks like for students to be "successful" in their roles during a pandemic.

Resources to Create
 • Best practices for student employees/leader training guide.
 • Virtual Training Platform Guide.
